Hi to all,

I would highly recommend that you visit this Google site (<http://www.google.com/ig/directory?synd=open>) in order to take a look at a wide selection of useful (and not so useful) web site widgets for your web pages. If you are unsure as to what a widget actually is, make sure you DO check out the site. You will also see some widgets on the references page of my CAU E-Publishing site.

Hi to all,

This is the editor, which will enable you to post your own comments on a topic within Chung Ang Chat. You can experiment here over the next few days. However, I would also like each of you to make on posting at least, in which you refer your peers to a new web site that you feel will be useful in the development of your specific web site.

Dear Students,

Since I appreciate that midterm exams are just around the corner, I am not going to heavily burden you with tasks that are tied to Chung Ang Chatter. However, between now, Thursday, October, 16th and Wednesday, October 22nd, I want each of you to visit at least one new web site that you feel will be useful to you and your peers and post that information in the forum.

If you follow the steps closely above, you shouldn't have any problem accessing the chat room/bulletin board in order to leave your comments.

Once gain, the URL for Chung Ang Chatter is, <http://www.cauepublishing.net/Chatshtml/>
In the next day or two, I will also link the chat room/bulletin board to my web site from this icon →  .

Also, I would like each of you to think of a useful topic by Friday, which is related to your course in MM and that I can set up a forum for on Chung Ang Chatter. The topic's focus should be related to educational technology and language education in general or your web site in particular. The topic/forum will enable you to not only offer your knowledge and insights, but also benefit by gaining new knowledge/information from your peers in a collaborative electronic habitat.

Cameron Wood
